Phantom Screens Offers New AIA Approved Course to Architects

Abbotsford, B.C. (December 6, 2016) – Phantom Screens, the leading manufacturer of retractable screens in North America, announces a new AIA-approved continuing education course: Customizing Motorized Retractable Screens to Enhance Building Performance (PHAN 020)

According to Ross Tripp, VP of Sales for Phantom Screens, the presentation is targeted specifically to architects for CES credits but is also applicable to designers, developers, builders and remodelers, general contractors and other professional audiences.

The course outlines the various customization options of motorized retractable screens available in the industry, and shows how the selected choices for integration deliver improved building performance and functionality.

“Participants of the course will gain practical knowledge on design and planning considerations for motorized retractable screens that can help to create energy efficient homes, maintain character of space, and achieve sustainable design goals,” says Ross.

The one-hour course will provide participants with 1 Learning Unit (1 LU) towards their continuing education credits. The course is also approved for its Health, Safety & Wellness content (HSW) by the AIA/CES.

This course is ideal in a Lunch and Learn format and for participant’s convenience, can be scheduled at the location and time of their choice.
